To Whom It May Concern:

A recent NERA study showed that exporting liquefied natural gas could help restore our country to greatness! As a veteran, I am writing you today because this study concluded that exporting liquefied natural gas, or LNG, to other countries could boost our faltering US economy. It concluded that exporting LNG could create jobs, create investments into US energy infrastructure and generate between $2.6 billion to almost $32.9 billion for the US economy. Because of these benefits, I strongly encourage the US government to consider exporting natural gas so we can get the country moving forward again.

We need jobs to provide opportunities for returning veterans from 10 years of war.

Sincerely,

Edward Cain
