Dear Secretary Chu:

Although top Democratic leader of the House Natural Resources Committee Ed Markey has condemned the study and findings of your department regarding natural gas exports, I adamantly disagree. With the condition of the economy and the lack of jobs in this country, I would think that our leaders would make an honest effort to find ways to improve the overall condition of America. I believe that exporting liquefied natural gas will improve our economy and job situation immensely.

My husband, Todd, and I have lived here for ten years, but I was originally from Indiana and the biggest industry we had there was RV production. Todd has lived here all his life, however, and in this community the insurance industry fuels the economy. He works in sales for a company that sells security systems and other products. Todd is very fortunate to have job security, where others may not. We have an ethanol plant here that employs a large number of people. However, new job creation is a must not only here but across the country.

America needs fewer imports and more production of our own natural resources. When America becomes less reliant on volatile countries, we will have a higher level of security and this is important to me. I tend to think of our country as a whole and believe that liquefied natural gas exports will create new jobs as well as offer job security. I am very much in support of LNG exportation and ask that you support it as well.

Your constituent,
