Dear Secretary Chu-

The last thing I would be worried about when setting energy policies is the environment. I have personally been around the pipeline and the people of Alaska because I worked for the Federal Aviation Administration before retiring. This pipeline is like a piece of thread; it does not hurt anyone. There are more animals there now than before the pipeline went through Alaska. We need to use our natural resources. Exporting liquefied natural gas will have a positive impact on America despite what Representative Ed Markey said in his letter to you.

This area has oil, natural gas companies and the Air Force base that fuels the economy. The jobs that are available here are high paying, and the ones not working do not want to work. My wife and I both used to be in the real estate business, but when the bubble burst we left the business. Today the housing market is picking up again, and the natural gas boon is partly responsible for this. For the past seven years I have been investing in developments and hope to open a home development business soon.

The natural gas production has picked up in a couple of counties surrounding us. As a matter of fact, my son works for a company that hauls natural gas. My three grandkids are working as well. One works for a roofing business, one is in the metal building business and the other works for a home builder. Increased natural gas production and exports of liquefied natural gas will protect their jobs and create new jobs. The more exporting we do the more people will be making money. America needs this kind of help, so please approve liquefied natural gas exports.

Sincerely yours,
